Hello,

I am writing this Email, because I believe that Microsoft has been let off the hook in it's current trial with the Dept. of Justice. After reading much documentation on the subject I can only come to one conclusion, This agreement was thrown together As fast as possible so both sides would be happy and the case would be closed.

However the penalties against Microsoft need to be thought out more, and not just by "Justice Dept. or Politicians"

I would suggest that you setup a panel of Tech. Experts from companies such as the ones that have been at the Mercy of Microsoft "AOL/Redhat/OEM's" and by regular People in the Tech. Industry such as "Reporters/CEO's/Consumers".

In the end these people will be the ones who have to deal with what you decide here, since you probably won't get another Chance to stop this Monopoly again any time soon.

Remember, Microsoft is great at finding loopholes/clauses in contracts/verdicts etc. that can allow it to continue. If the remedy in this case, were to benefit the computer Industry as we all hope, Microsoft would have never agreed To it, so something is still very wrong.

Sincerely,

Keith Carver
